Just Do It

From the point of view of marketing, Nike has dominated in their branding with success after success for decades. Sure, there have been some side steps and some blips in their strategy from time to time and the current controversy over their recent spokesman will either pay off or it won't. I don't know. But overall Nike has had a clear and penetrating brand with a clear message. Just do it.

It speaks to us. Our culture and our thirst for success can simply summed up in a short imperative command. Just do it. Don't hesitate, mess around, or falter. Just do it. If you think you're the champion (and don't we all), then get off the couch and make it happen. Just do it.

The marketers hope that you'll think "If you buy our brand, you'll be successful because you'll have the power to achieve." It's a good product association tactic that is rich in empowerment marketing.

It's also a cornerstone of who we are as disciples of Jesus Christ at Saint Andrew Parish. No literally, it is actually, physically, and in reality our cornerstone. On the south west corner of Addison and Paulina you can see the square rock at the the corner of the church building of Saint Andrew which reads "Faith without works is dead." James 2:17 (don't be thrown off because the numbers are in Latin).

This little quote is also found in the Second Reading today at Mass and it is at the heart of one of the critical distinctions of Catholic doctrine. Protestant theology after the Reformation rightly restored the very important understanding of Christian doctrine that God's grace is the key to salvation. The correction was made because an error in Catholic theology throughout Europe during the middle of the second millennium led many to believe that they could "earn" salvation by doing enough good works. If they tried hard enough, then and only then would God love them. This is a false narrative. God's salvation is a free gift, unearned, and arrives to us through faith. That's what the Protestant leaders helped remind the church. (Thanks be to God!)

But the Catholic Church retained the important distinction (inspired by today's second reading from the book of James) that if we truly have salvation through the gift of faith, it will lead us into action. It will cause us to do something. We don't feed the hungry, shelter the homeless, and strive for a more just society so that we will earn God's favor. It's the other way around. Because God loves us, we put our faith into action by the work we do. Why? Because faith without works is dead. Faith and works are symbiotic manifestations of God's grace.

No one said that being Christian, especially in today's world, would be easy, but it is important to remember that it is a full contact activity. Being a Christian is not something where you can sit on the bench (or a pew) and just watch the game. You need to get involved. You need to be the champion, who inspired by God's love, can love in return with overwhelming generosity.

The call to put our faith into action is as simple and clear as the Nike tag line. Just do it. Nothing is holding you back and God needs you to get in the game.

-David Heimann, Pastoral Associate

On July 9th a text was sent that said, “Hey Mom and Dad! I just met your grandson.” Despite the time difference, a response was quickly received, “You have some explaining to do...” This exchange with my parents made me laugh and is only one of the many memorable things about that particular Monday.

For the past five years, I have been the “American Mom” to Ssenjala Andrew. Andrew is a bright, kind, soft-spoken 20-year-old whom I have supported through OHU. A few years ago, there was the potential opportunity to go to Uganda and meet Andrew. That trip did not materialize and Andrew’s letter brought tears to my eyes when he expressed how disappointed he was to not have met. When the opportunity to travel to Uganda this past July presented itself, I couldn’t say no.

Meeting Andrew was the highlight of my trip. When we first met, I was nervous and didn’t know what to say, do or expect. I’m not a shy person, but what are one’s first words when you meet someone that you have a unique bond with, but have only interacted with over a few snail mail letters.

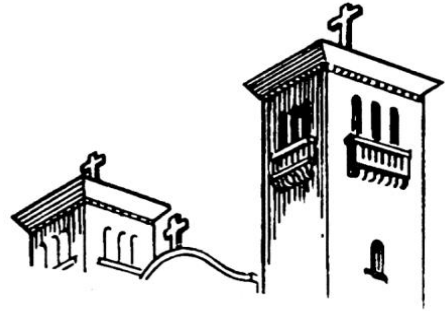

We hugged and chatted for a bit. Andrew shared that he would be taking his university exams in the fall and hoped to start his studies at Makerere University in 2019. I told him how proud I was of him and that I would continue to support him. We continued to talk, but I kept noticing a table of boys about Andrew’s age watching us. These were Andrew’s friends that he hadn’t seen in a long time since they went to different schools around Mityana. I didn’t want to be the “hovering parent” so I told him to catch-up with the boys and that I would bring over some snacks. He quickly gave me a hug and was off.

As the morning progressed, I continued to watch Andrew in his element, smiling, sharing some Pringles and laughing with his friends. This made me think about when I was young and just wanted my parents to leave me alone so that I could hang out with friends. I gave him that space, but every now and again we would make eye contact and Andrew would flash his beautiful smile and my heart would melt. I knew that meeting Andrew and having those moments would be treasures that I would have for a life time.

VOLUNTEER OPPORTUNITIES AT THE GREATER CHICAGO FOOD DEPOSITORY

October 15th 8:30 to 11:15

The Greater Chicago Food Depository is located at 4100 W. Ann Lurie Place in Chicago.

Upcoming date: November 3rd 8:30 to 11:15

Each month we work on different projects when we show up at GCFD. Last month 6 of us from St. Andrew's repackaged dry black beans from a 1900 pound bin into 3 pound bags. We join up with other volunteers from the area to complete the task. Jobs include labeling the bags, making boxes, scooping and making sure the bags weigh 3 pounds and the strongest shovel the beans into boxes. The only requirement is that you are at least 14 years old (accompanied by an adult) and can stand for 2 1/2 hours. During that 2 1/2 hours we enjoy meeting like minded people that are there to help feed the hungry of Cook County. Why not give volunteering on one Saturday morning a month a try. It is humbling to know that this small effort can feed several thousand people. If you have any questions, please contact Nancy Holland at:
